EAD Now Valid for 2 Years

USCIS will increase the current one-year validity period on initial and renewal EADs to two years for certain adjustment of status applicants. This will significantly lessen the number of employment authorization requests USCIS receives, allow USCIS to shift limited resources to other priority areas, and ease an unnecessary burden on individuals waiting on the adjudication of their adjustment of status applications.

Effective immediately, initial and renewal EADs for eligible adjustment applicants will be valid for two years, instead of one year.
